Since my childhood days, I always dreamed of doing something where I could help people. Caring for people is at the heart of medicine. I think that my passion for science, craving constant learning in a complex, ever-changing landscape, and a desire to help others led me to pursue medicine as a career. I find medicine to be a noble profession where honesty and integrity are essential. It is a privilege to be able to help people when they are most vulnerable. It is very rewarding when we are able to positively impact lives of patients and their families using our medical skills and compassion.

During my medical career, I have been privileged to work with a wide range of patients. They have taught me a lot about life. Over time, I have formed a bond with them. They are like family to me. They care about me as much as I care about them. That is what makes this profession so special.

I want to provide the same level of care to my patients that I would want for myself or my family members. That has always been my goal as a physician. That is what makes me strive for the best treatment options for my patients.
